

St Ann's Reformatory for Protestant Girls

1896 – c. 1905

Other Names: • St Ann's Sub-Reformatory School

Details

St Ann's was established on 3rd March 1896 as a sub-reformatory of the Brookside Reformatory for Protestant Girls. Like the Brookside Reformatory, St Ann's provided reformatory training to girls prior to them being sent to domestic service placements. It was located on a farm a few miles from Heywood in Western Victoria, and was variously described as being situated at Mount Clay, Tyrendarra, and Narrawong. In 1899 St Ann's was declared to be an independent reformatory, separate from the Brookside Reformatory. St Ann's closed some time around 1905.

St Ann's opened with approximately 12 girls in residence, all of whom had been transferred there from the Brookside Reformatory for Protestant Girls. It had between 9 and 12 girls in residence until 1902, at which time the Matron began reducing the intake with a view of closing the Home. In 1904 the Department for Neglected Children and Reformatory Schools reported that there was no intention of sending any more girls to St Ann's, as there were suitable places for them nearer to Melbourne. St Ann's appears to have closed in 1905.

Like Brookside, St Ann's came under scrutiny for the treatment of the girls in residence. In an editorial published in the Hamilton Spectator in 1899, the writer, identifying themselves as "Uncle Tom", raised issues with the workload and treatment of girls at the reformatory. They alleged that the girls were expected to "do men's laborious work" such as clearing land, felling trees, cutting timber, and erecting fences, and sometimes received floggings. This complaint was made shortly after reports were published criticising conditions at Brookside, which stated that girls there received harsh treatment, including floggings, bread and water diets, and heavy workloads. In response to these claims the Department conducted inspections primarily of Brookside, but also of St Ann's. The inspector found that in the preceding year there had been one instance of corporal punishment at St Ann's, though publications of the report did not include mention of the working conditions there.

More info

Related Entries

Run by

- Brookside Private Reformatory for Protestant Girls \(1887 - 1903\)

St Ann's was established as a sub-reformatory of Brookside

Date: 1896 - 1899